

Aethra Vega X1

Frequently Asked Questions

Q1. What are the advantages of Vega X1 with respect to Vega ProS in terms of technical characteristics?

A1. Vega X1 has a line rate up to 2Mbps over IP network (vs. the 768kbps of Vega ProS); ISDN connectivity is optional, so you could save money if you don't need it. Moreover Vega X1 has some features not available with Vega ProS: MOCS compatibility, security mode option.

Q2. In what sense Vega X1 is interoperable with Microsoft® Office Communications 2007?

A2. Vega X1, after its registration to the server of MOCS platform, appears on the buddy list of all MOCS clients with its presence indicator: it can be called by every MOCS client with a simple selection of the contact on the buddy list.

Q3. Is there XGA available as an option for Vega X1?

A3. No, it isn't. Vega X1 was thought as a entry level set top at a very low cost; XGA is available for Vega X3, the system of the same line with more features.

Q4. What is the security mode option?

A4. It is a software option available for all systems of Aethra X-line; with this option the administrator could create a list of users who are enabled to have access only to particular system functions (address book, configuration settings, system statistics) through a username and a password: only authorized users can have access to the system.

Q5. Vega X1 is a low cost system: is it also a low quality system in terms of audio and video?

A5. Absolutely no. As all Aethra endpoints it implements all standard audio coding (G.722, G.728, G.722.1) and video coding (H.261, H.263, H.263+, H.264) necessary to a high-quality videoconferencing.
